WHOLE NUMBER 1446

FOR OUR PEOPLE TO DECIDE

So far as we know, there has been little response either in this country or in foreign countries to the somewhat remarkable address delivered by Secretary of State Cordell Hull, in Nashville, Tennessee, early this month.

Declaring that the world is today in the grip of a severe upheaval, the outcome of which will effect profoundly the future of mankind, the Secretary of State declared that there never was a time in our national history when the influence of the United States in support of international law was more urgently needed to serve both our own best interests and those of the entire human race.

In order to reverse the present disastrous trend in international relations, Mr. Hull said that this country was prepared to join other nations.

(1) In directing every effort towards the restoration and strengthening of sound and constructive international economic relationships;

(2) In moving resolutely toward bringing about an effective agreement on limitation and progressive reduction of armaments;

(3) In resuming and vigorously carrying forward the works, soapsuciously begun at The Hague, two generations ago, of humanizing by common agreement the rules and practices of warfare.

(4) In exploring all other methods of revitalizing the spirit of international cooperation and in making use of every practicable means of giving it substance and reality through the numberless forms of concrete application of such principles of international, economic, and cultural relations.

Declaring that these "are necessary and constructive steps" in which a free and powerful nation like the United States should participate if durable peace is to survive and advance, Mr. Hull stressed the "definite need" of a strong and united public opinion in support of such a renewal and demonstration of faith in the possibility of a "world order based on law and international cooperative effort."

The Secretary of State declared that when such public opinion has developed, and when it is clearly understood that the momentous issue of today is the decision whether relations among nations shall be governed by arms or by cooperation and order under law, there will be no insuperable difficulty "in finding acceptable ways and means of achieving the desired ends."

Here we have the Secretary of State outlining clearly to the citizens of this Democracy the alternative that they face in international affairs. We can arm ourselves to the teeth, stand aloof from the world's problems and maintain, perhaps, a precarious peace. Such a program will cost a great deal of money, but, in addition, it will hamper advance along cultural, social and democratic lines. It will mean, eventually, relinquishment of many of the privileges that freedom gives to an independent people.

If the people of the United States do not want such a development, they must find some way to make the power of the United States a factor in world affairs. This power must be utilized in support of international law and order, based upon the equality of nations, and the right of each nation to enjoy all economic opportunities. This will make possible a "world order based on law" and mean the greatest advancement of the human race.

Such a program will not cost as much in money, it will not require the sacrifice of many liberties on the part of the individual, but undoubtedly, it will cost something. If the people of this country want this, they must be ready to make their contributions, which will include, at times, perhaps, the surrender of special privileges in the world order.

Card of Thanks

We wish to express our sincere appreciations for the kindness and sympathy extended to us by our friends and neighbors during the illness, death, and burial of our Dear Mother, Mrs. Laura Belle Trimble. We especially thank the choir for the beautiful songs, and Rev. Harlan Murphy and Rev. Harlan McClure for their consoling words of comfort to us.

THE CHILDREN

SALUTING OF UNITED STATES FLAG

Federal Judge Albert B. Maris of Philadelphia, Pa., made a noteworthy ruling on June 18, 1938, reversing the decision in the case of the Minersville (Pa.) Public School Board. It appears that two students of that school, brother and sister, had refused to salute the flag of the United States by reason of their religious convictions. In November, 1935, the children were expelled, and since that time have been educated under legal compulsion at a school conducted by their religious sect (Jehovah's Witnesses).

After declaring it was clear from the evidence that the refusal of "these two earnest Christian children" to salute the flag could not even remotely prejudice or imperil the safety, health, morals, property, or personal rights of their fellows, Judge Maris pointed out that it was only necessary to glance at the current world scene to realize that the preservation of individual liberty is more important today than ever it was in the past; that the safety of our nation depends upon the extent to which we foster in each individual citizen that sturdy independence of thought and action, which is essential in a democracy.

The loyalty of our people, the court said, is to be judged not so much by their words as by the part they play in the body politic. Judge Maris held that the country's safety surely does not depend upon the totalitarian idea of forcing all citizens into one common mold of thinking and acting, or requiring them to render a lip service of loyalty in a manner which conflicts with their sincere religious convictions.

Such a doctrine seemed to the jurist utterly alien to the genius and spirit of our Nation and destructive of that personal liberty of which our flag itself is the symbol.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

Wright, Ky., June 29, 1938

The training work center of Wright, Ky., on June 21, 1938, open to the public for visitors and a large crowd attended, and made the following report: The display showed every sign of careful work and well made garments. The fabric was well converted into garments with nice seams and looked as if they were factory made. The display was well arranged so as to attract attention. The women were dressed nice and clean with uniforms and seemed to be enjoying their work. The work is being done in a small house, yet it was nice and clean and well decorated. The Supervisor, Mrs. Rose Blackwell, was very busy in looking after the workers and arranging the display. This type of work is to be commended and should be appreciated by the community.

SELL FARM AT AUCTION

The Norman Realty Company of Whitesburg on Monday sold at Public Auction a tract of about 500 acres of farm and timber land formerly owned by Joe M. Kendall. The place belonged to Mr. Kendall's only heir, Mrs. Vivian Salyer. The price realized was just a trifle short of $5,000. There is said to be considerable timber on the property.

The Cole Hotel which has been offered for sale for some time on account of Mr. Cole's health was bid up to $9,950, but was not sold, as the owners considered the price too low. The same company went to the Susan Wells farm Tuesday where it was generally expected a sale would be made of that place. Sam D. Cecil was the auctioneer at both sales.

MAY EXTEND TOWN LIMITS

At the meeting of the Town Board of Trustees on Monday evening of this week certain residents just outside of the eastern border of town asked to have the town border extended in that section so as to include a number of residents in that section. The Board instructed these people to draw up a petition and secure the signature of those in that section who wished to be included within the town borders and thus secure the rights and benefits of regular residents and present same at some future meeting of the Board.

If You're Planning To Build

By W. S. Lowndes
Director, Schools of Architecture and Building
International Correspondence Schools

ONE of the most important things to keep in mind when you are planning to build is the arrangement of closet space. Closets are indispensable and should be installed wherever required as far as the cost of the house warrants. In inexpensive houses, where space is necessarily scarce, closets are used sparingly. When possible each bedroom should have a large closet. These closets should be provided with high shelves and with strips for hooks, and may be fitted with any of the patented devices for hanging clothing. The door should open so as to admit direct daylight or lamplight. Also there should be a good-sized closet connected with the kitchen, one with the laundry, and one for coats, etc. In connection with the hall, it is desirable to have a closet for linen, one for china and cedar closets for the storage of winter clothing and blankets.

If your house is to have a cellar make it serve you well. The average cellar is a sort of catch-all, and is apt to contain a miscellaneous collection of objects, many of which are useless. A modern cellar should be properly designed for certain functions. The heating apparatus, of course, is a prime necessity and should be thoughtfully located. The laundry is frequently located in the cellar and should be closed off so as to be free from dust. By partitioning off the cellar with tight, dust-proof partitions a large game room can sometimes be located there. Such a room may be used as a play room for the children. Closets for storage purposes also may be built into any well planned cellar.

MOVING DAY

When a family has to pick up the stove and bed and move from one place to another it is usually a task that lasts all day and well into the night.

But, when a post office for a town the size of West Liberty has to move not only its insides but the whole building to a new location that is a considerably greater task.

That stunt has just been pulled off here. Some weeks ago Mr. Wells sold the lot from under the post office building and for several days this week the post office building, under the guidance of Wells Brothers has been slowly creeping along the street to its new location.

The building is now on its new location. It stood the trip well. All inside fixtures, including post office boxes, the big money box, and often even the postmaster himself, held to their accustomed places.

The moving did not lack in interest, as a row of spectators continually lined both sides of the street along the course taken by the movers.

FARMERS' COLUMN

THE FARM AND HOME

Ask your children, "What is the most important thing you eat?" They will tell you, "Food." It does not need to be said that food is the most important thing we eat. It is the foundation of our life. Without food, we cannot live. Therefore, it is our duty to eat wisely and to make the most of our food.

Eggs and milk always can be added to a child's diet to advantage. Milk is a nearly complete food, and eggs are rich in proteins, have some of the vitamins and calcium. The diet standard should be a quart of milk a day and two or three eggs.

Homemakers will have easier work later, if they check again to be sure all winter clothes are properly stored. Gummed tape may be used to close boxes of clothes, applying it entirely around the edges so that no open space is left.

In cultivating the garden, the job is made easier if the plow is properly adjusted. With a walking plow, the operator feels the heavy pull if adjustments aren't just right, though with other plows he may not become aware of it.

One-piece suits for small children have several advantages. One is that they don't have the discomfort of elastic around the waist, or of leggings that may slip down. Young children cannot adjust clothes that slip.

One thing always pays both farm and city people—taking proper care of the eyes. Eye strain may show in many ways, including headache, excessive fatigue and irritability. Lights should always be adequate and properly placed so that reading won't cause a strain.

SANITATION TO PREVENT

Sanitation is the employment of measures designed to promote health and prevent disease. It has to do with measures which destroy or make harmless the germs of disease and break the life cycle of parasites. Sanitation is not the same as disinfection. Disinfection is the use of chemicals to destroy germs. Sanitation is a broader term, including the use of chemicals, but also the use of other measures, such as the use of clean water, proper food, and the use of clean clothing. The sanitation of a community is a matter of great importance, and it is the duty of every citizen to do his part to keep his community clean and healthy.

Disinfectants are not cures for disease, but tend to prevent its spread by acting against the causative agent. The worth of a germicide depends entirely upon its power to destroy germs, which property is not indicated by the odor, color, or other physical characteristics. The physical characteristics, such as sunlight, fresh air, heat and cold, are valuable.

In the process of disinfection thoroughness is all-important. The first step is to remove all dirt, manure and other filth. Dampen all surfaces before sweeping or scraping to avoid scattering germs in the dust. Apply a disinfectant to all material removed, then thoroughly soak all exposed surfaces with a disinfecting solution, and keep animals out for a period.

KENTUCKY DAIRYING SHOWS IMPROVEMENT

The annual report of Kentucky dairy herd improvement associations shows increased production among the cooperating farmers last year. Gross income from dairy products produced in the seven associations was $452,912, and income above feed cost was $241,325. Much of the feed was home-grown.

Members of the associations owned on an average 21 cows, sold $1,700 worth of feed through their herds.

Average production per cow was 332 pounds of butterfat, the highest in the history of the testing program in Kentucky. A total of 1,382 cows produced 400 to 500 pounds, 74 cows, 500 to 600 pounds, and five cows, 600 to 700 pounds. Thirteen herds averaged over 400 pounds.

Registered bulls were used in 119 of the 125 herds. Better feeding was in evidence everywhere, practically all herds receiving legume hay and 60 percent of them alfalfa. Many dairymen also fed grains and silage.

The dairy improvement work in the state has been greatly enlarged, according to a report of the College of Agriculture at Lexington. There now are 14 herd improvement associations containing 320 herds and 6,610 cows. Thus the number of associations has doubled in the last year, and the number of cows on test more than doubled.

WASHINGTON NOTES

FORLEIGH LOBBYISTS

In accordance with the recommendations of congressional committees, which investigated communism, terrorism and un-American activities in the United States in general, a new law requires all employees of agencies engaged in dissemination of foreign political propaganda in the United States to register with the Secretary of State.

PATROL PLANES

The Army and Navy seem to be in a competition to develop the best long-range patrol planes. The Navy plans to let a contract for a 50-ton flying boat this fall and the Army, it is reported, is working on plans for one of 75 tons. The Army already has fourteen of the 16-ton flying fortress bombers, with 26 being constructed. The Navy has 250 flying boats able to carry two tons of bombs, a crew of seven to ten men, and cover four thousand miles. More than fifty additional flying boats of this type are under construction.

BAN ON PLANES

The sale of airplanes by American manufacturers to countries guilty of bombing raids on non-combatant men, women and children, will be frowned upon in the future by the State Department which will use its great influence to discourage such sales. Secretary of State Cordell Hull makes it plain that sales to Japan, for example, will be considered a violation of American foreign policy.

Because of the fact that, in the past, private interests have been slow to engage in business with foreigners, which has been condemned if not outlawed by the government, leads observers to believe that future sales to Japan will be sharply curtailed.

MUNITIONS EXPORTED

For two and a half years, the United States has required licenses for the export of munitions. During this time, something like $120,000,000 worth of munitions have been sent to foreign nations. The 12,124 licenses issued involve exports of all types of munitions and to virtually every country in the world. An idea of the various classes of shipments can be found in the figures for the two years ending November 30, 1937. The largest categories were arms which included various types of weapons, totaling $5,598,932; ammunition, including shells, cartridges, bombs and high explosives, $11,783,775; and aircraft, which includes all types of planes, both civil and war, together with accessories, parts, bomb projectors, etc., $64,711,475.

CONTROL PRODUCTION

It is interesting to read newspapers in industrial areas when they attack the theory of crop control. Even today, when growers of wheat, corn and cotton see falling prices in the face of expected supplies, these newspapers criticize what they call the "doctrine of scarcity."

The editors bewail any action on the part of the Government, tending to assist farmers to keep supplies within reasonable bounds. It is a great crime, in the eyes of these spokesmen for industrialists, when farmers restrict the acreage of crops although warehouses are bulging with farm products that cannot be sold at extremely low prices.

Policies of restriction or curtailment of production, when applied to agriculture, are denounced with the saying that the trouble in the United States is not one of over-supply but of under-demand. Farmers are advised to go ahead and raise wheat and corn to feed hungry mouths, and to plant more cotton in order to clothe the half-clad. It is a mistake, say the critics, to attempt any regulation of supply because when the demand straightens out, everything will be all right with agriculture.

In most of the cities, where these editors are writing their attacks upon the theory of crop control, industrial plants are idle and hundreds and thousands of working men are without work. If you ask the industrialists why they have stopped their plants and thrown workers out of employment, they will tell you that they have more goods already than they can sell and that they will invite bankruptcy by continuing production in the face of present demands.

The industrial-minded editors who berate crop control for agriculture have nothing but kind words for production control in industry. They do not object to employees out of work or plants that are idle. They do not advise the capitalists who have poured their money in the production and sale of goods and products at half price because there is no real thing as over-production or that what makes trouble in this country is lack of demand.

The truth of the matter is that over-supply and under-demand are terms referring to the same condition. Intelligent action should be directed against the condition itself rather than wasting time in a debate over what name to apply to the economic situation.

The Courier does not criticize the owner of an industrial plant for ceasing production when he cannot sell the supply of his product that he has on hand. Neither does it criticize the farmers of the country for taking steps to curtail production when the supply of their product is much greater than the markets of the world can use.

To this newspaper, any individual, whether farmer or industrialist, is entitled to curtail production when continued production in the face of a glutted market promises nothing but bankruptcy to the individual.

WHAT ABOUT THE WEATHER

From both personal observation and from complaint letters that have been reaching the department, a word concerning the weather seems timely. Much of what will be said in the nature of a post mortem with the patient not dead, perhaps, but in a bad way, sometimes.

In most of Kentucky there has been more rain than was needed. Except for just a few days, there has been no hot weather and the nights have been definitely uncomfortably cool. As a result, and because of rain-soaked soil, soil temperatures have stayed low and the "warm" crops, tomatoes, sweetpotatoes, peppers and eggplants have been delayed, though the potatoes, salads and greens have been helped.

Many gardeners complain quite bitterly about their soils having "run together," because of heavy downpours of rain and because they were prevented from going into their gardens to keep them cultivated. This run-together condition aggravates the other handicap, that of the weather, and taking them together, not much comfort is left the gardener, for his "warm" crops may continue backward all summer.

Now, to suggest that something may be done to change the weather would be fool-hardy, were it not for the fact that by removing the run-together soil difficulty, much of the effect of an unfriendly season may be removed, too. That this is so may be proved by observing the condition of beans and other tender crops in many gardens throughout the state, where rains were taken to insure soils workable and loose, by incorporating in them adequate amounts of humus.

Obviously, it is too late now to make a good humus shortage, but with the lesson plain, effort should be begun now so that the same trouble will not befall again in 1939. In fact, all through the summer, humus materials, such as lawn clippings, garden debris, and in the autumn, tree leaves. Turned under during the winter, these help. But, better, would be to sow in the fall, rye or barley or even greens to turn under early in the following spring, to make humus of the best possible kind.

The point usually made for humus is that because it makes soil loose and fluffy, capable of holding moisture, it serves in the capacity of insurance against drought. But, in loose and fluffy soil excess moisture sinks zone; thus humus is wet weather insurance, as well. Again, because of the open nature of soil well supplied with humus, sun heat can penetrate, and this heat is held, enabling such soil to warm up earlier and stay warmer than compacted soil. And, the effects of "weather" are mitigated.

In gardens where there is enough humus, cultivation is made easy, for merely light skimming of the surface is needed, the gardener secure in the knowledge that the lower soil is in proper condition for vegetable roots easily to penetrate throughout. With the soil compacted, however, deep working must be attempted to improve matters. Perhaps, slight improvement is made, but always at a tremendous cost in labor, and generally at the expense of the crop, in whose behalf the effort is made. At very best, the improvement is not permanent, but the next rain causes the soil to run together again, and when rains become infrequent, drought and catastrophe set in.

But, "humus" is the answer to so many garden questions, even the one as to "what to do about the weather."

AUNT SARAH

Shaking Hands Unknown in Some Distant Lands

The handshake is by no means universal. Inhabitants of bleak Tierra del Fuego welcome the rare strangers who come there with a bear hug and a back-patting, meanwhile jumping up and down, the New York World Telegram says. An African west coast negro, on greeting a friend, may fling himself to his knees and kiss the ground three times. Israelites of old bowed themselves to the ground seven times.

Andaman islanders blow into one another's hands with a cooing sound. Indians on the Gulf of Mexico blow into each other's ears. Africans of the French Colony of Dahomey twist their finger knuckles until they emit a loud crack. Eskimos rub noses. They are bewildered by the sight of handshaking, assuming it to signify that when your right hand grows tired your friends help you hold it.

A Mohammedan, according to ancient custom, may shake hands with you with thumbs up, then touch his breast, forehead and lips with his hand to signify that you are cherished in his heart and thoughts, and are entitled to a bit of escalation.

WRIGLEY

June 28.—Just a word for safety and a hint to drivers: There are so many men (and women too) who are the most courteous people when seen in their own homes, or in the homes of others, that become the most discourteous people imaginable when driving along the highway. They drive too fast; they just must be "the thing" on the road. They insist on passing all cars before them on a curve or any where. Such impolite drivers are the cause of many accidents, both slight and serious. Let's all resolve to be more courteous on the road, as well as in our homes. Much grief will be spared our fellow man hereby.
